I just read an article on the FASAB board's review of whether or not to report the total accrued liabilities of Social Security and other entitlements. Of course you should report this information. The citizenry of this country has no idea the pending catastrophe looming because of entitlement programs enacted by the government. Our government spending is out of control. It is time to at least tell it like it really is, which is apparently your responsibility. How about doing your job?! Or is that asking too much from an arm of the government of the USA?
